A 15-year-old girl comes to the physician for a routine examination. Over the past few months, her parents have been in a high-conflict divorce during which she has been living with her paternal aunt. The girl was diagnosed with type 1 diabetes mellitus at age 12 and was prescribed insulin therapy. She also has attention deficit hyperactivity disorder for which she takes methylphenidate. She is currently a sophomore in high school and has won many awards in gymnastics and competitive dance. Her BMI is 16.5 mg/kg<sup>2</sup> and her weight is 9.1 kg (20 lb) less than her last visit. The patient initially says that she has no concerns but then begins to cry and says that she feels "pressured to look perfect." The patient discloses that she has been avoiding insulin to lose weight and frequently doubles the dose of the methylphenidate to decrease her appetite. The patient has no symptoms of depression, suicidal ideation, or homicidal ideation. She tells the physician that she will stop misusing her medications so long as her parents are not informed about her eating disorder. Which of the following is the most appropriate course of action?

A. Tell the girl that her parents will be notified because she is a minor [24%]

B. Tell the girl that her parents will be notified because she is at risk for self-harm [50%]

C. Tell the girl that her parents will be notified because they pay for her health insurance [0%]

D. Tell the girl that her parents will not be notified because she is an emancipated minor [4%]

E. Tell the girl that her parents will not be notified because the visit is regarding mental health [20%]
